Three officers hurt in Village shootout

West Village. Two U.S. Marshalls and an NYPD detective were wounded trying to arrest a suspected sex offender, who was killed in the battle.

A suspected sex offender died during a shootout inside a West Village smoke shop that left two U.S. Marshalls and an NYPD detective wounded on Monday, officials said.

Charles Mozdir, 32, an accused child molester whose story appeared on CNN's "The Hunt with John Walsh" last week, was killed after opening fire at the law enforcement officers when they tried to apprehend him at Smoking Culture, a West 4th Street head shop, shortly after 1 p.m., police said.

A former wedding photographer, Mozdir had been on the run since being arrested in California for sexually abusing a 7-year-old boy in June 2012, CNN reported. After skipping an arraignment at a San Diego Court, the last sign of Mozdir was in Georgia, when a bloodhound picked up his scent near U.S. Highway 17.

More than two years later, authorities received a tip Mozdir was working at the smoke shop. Working with a federal Fugitive Task Force, a 45-year-old NYPD detective entered Smoking Culture and identified Mozdir, though police said he had changed his appearance.

The suspect

Mozdir had been wanted for five counts of committing forcible lewd acts on a child as well as trying to persuade a witness from prosecuting a crime.

- A $1 million warrant was issued for Mozdir's arrest and authorities in California had warned he owned a gun.

Visit Metro.us for updates on the shooting and other NYPD crime news.

"The detective, accompanied by United States Marshalls, entered the shop to make an apprehension," Police Commissioner Bill Bratton said. "Immediately upon entering, a gun battle ensued."

The detective, who had more than 20 years on the job and was recently promoted, was hit twice in the stomach, police said. Bratton said the bulletproof vest the detective wore may have saved his life.

Two marshalls were also wounded. All three men were recovering at Bellevue Hospital.

Mozdir was pronounced dead at the same hospital. His .32-caliber revolver was recovered at the scene and 20 spare rounds of ammunition were found in his pocket, Bratton said.

Details of the shooting — including if Mozdir fired first — are still un-

After visiting with each of the law enforcement officers with Bratton, Mayor Bill de Blasio praised the work of the law enforcement officers.

Downtown. 9/11 museum allowed to display cross-shaped beam

A cross-shaped steel beam pulled from the collapsed World Trade Center days after the September 11, 2001, attacks can be displayed in the national memorial museum, a U.S. appeals court ruled on Monday.

An atheist group sued the museum, seeking to block the display as unconstitutional, arguing that the cross was a religious symbol that had no place in a government-sponsored institution.

In 2013, U.S. District Judge Deborah Batts dismissed the lawsuit, and a three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld her ruling on Monday.

The American Atheists, which filed the lawsuit, had argued on appeal for a plaque next to the cross commemorating atheists who died in the attacks.

Mayor Bill de Blasio told reporters on Monday that the costumed characters who flock to Times Square and trade photos with tourists for tips have gone "too far."

"I don't know whether to call it an industry or what you call it, but it needs to be regulated," de Blasio said, adding that he would look to City Council to act on proposed legislation.

Referred to as an "Elmo craze," the mayor said it was inappropriate for anybody to harass tourists and demand money.

Over the weekend, NYPD reportedly arrested six costumed characters at Times Square, including a rogue Spider-Man identified as 25-year-old Junior Bishop.

Man dies trapped in elevator shaft

A man in his 20s died after being trapped in an elevator shaft of a Bronx building early Monday, police said.

Around 3:55 a.m., officers responded to a 911 call of a man trapped at a public housing development in Longwood, police said.

The man, who has not yet been identified, was discovered in the John Adams Houses unconscious and stuck between an elevator shaft wall and elevator car between the 18th and 19th floors, police said. Emergency workers pulled the man from the shaft but he was pronounced dead at the scene. ANNA SANDERS

Transit. U.K. lecturer reinterprets how New Yorkers get around the city.

Max Roberts has never ridden the city's subway — but he's thought about the system's twists and turns more than most riders.

A psychology lecturer at the University of Essex in England, Roberts, 47, has designed 150 mass transit guides, including two rethinking the city's subway map.

One of the maps, completed by Roberts last month, is a friendlier take on the contentious 1972 map by Massimo Vignelli, who died this May. Another presents the transit system's colorful lines as concentric circles.

He spoke to Metro about how different riders interpret maps and what he likes about the MTA's current subway map.

Why are you interested in map design?

Roberts: My speciality in psychology, I'm interested in intelligence testing, so how different people can cope with all the different information in all the world. ... In parallel, I've always had an interest in maps.

Your NYC subway maps are diagram maps — what are those trying to accomplish?

It's trying to take a complex world and turn it into simple straight lines. But a lot of diagram maps take a complex world and they turn it into zigzags instead.

A lot of New Yorkers disliked the 1972 subway map by Vignelli — which smoothed out routes into 45- or 90-degree angles — and it lasted only seven years. What do you think?
The original Vignelli from '72 is a beautiful, organized design that's let down by a disorganized color scheme. There were a few geographical glitches on it, which upset a few people. The overall geographical shape's failings have been exaggerated.

What changes did you make to his map?

I've worked into the Vignelli style map with experimental angles that I thought would suit New York better, just trying to get it into a better shape to make it less geographically upsetting to people who've got a certain tolerance of this.

How can you tell who will tolerate diagram maps?

There's something I like to call the 4/5/6 test. The Lexington Avenue lines, when they go through Grand Central Station, they actually flip from Lexington Avenue to Park Avenue. Vignelli shows that on all his maps as a straight line, and that really upsets some people. People who have a very low tolerance for geographical distortion hate that — they want to see the line zigzag there.

What do you think of current design?

The more I look at that map, the less I like it. ... They've made Manhattan so fat that it looks as though it's worth getting the subway from 14th Street Union Square to where the L meets the blue lines. It's not a good map for helping you decide whether to take a journey or not.

Have you ever ridden the New York City subway?

I've never been to New York.

Why were you interested in mapping the subway?

It's one of the great systems. If you design maps, you can't ignore the New York subway map. You've got to use it and try to understand it.

Truly Unique

Time travel at the speed of a 1935 Speedster?

The 1930s brought unprecedented innovation in machine-age technology and materials. Industrial designers from the auto industry translated the principles of aerodynamics and streamlining into everyday objects like radios and toasters. It was also a decade when an unequalled variety of watch cases and movements came into being. In lieu of hands to tell time, one such complication, called a jumping mechanism, utilized numerals on a disc viewed through a window. With its striking resemblance to the dashboard gauges and radio dials of the decade, the jump hour watch was indeed "in tune" with the times!

The Stauer 1930s Dashtronic deftly blends the modern functionality of a 21-jewel automatic movement and 3-ATM water resistance with the distinctive, retro look of

Katz's Deli wins name battle with Florida cafe

Katz's Deli has won a legal battle to force a Florida restaurant to change its name, according to court documents made public on Monday.

Katz's Delicatessen, founded in 1888, sued Katz's Deli of Deerfield Beach in June, claiming the Florida restaurant had blatantly infringed on its trademark rights.

Katz's Delicatessen of Deerfield agreed to change its name in the settlement, which was signed in Manhattan federal court last week.

The Deerfield Beach restaurant owner, Charles Re, said he agreed to the change because keeping the name was not worth the legal troubles.

"It wasn't something that we needed to have to sustain ourselves," Re said. REUTERS

Transit. MTA releases $14.5 billion budget

The Metropolitan Transportation Authority still expects to increase fares for bus, subway and rail services in 2015 and 2017, the agency said in its proposed 2015 budget, which was released on Monday.

The MTA said the 4 percent increases, announced in December, will remain steady even as the MTA deals with increasing costs.

In total, the MTA projects a $14.5 billion budget from tolls, fares and taxes. That money will in turn largely be spent on infrastructure and on settlements with unions.

Customers can expect increased bus and subway services, which will cost $10.1 million. For one, 14,000 weekend riders can expect an extended J train service to Broad Street stop by summer 2015.

A total of $363 million will be spent on upgrades, repairs and training.

Bespoke. Amazon offers 3-D printing to customize wares

Amazon.com will offer 3-D printing services that allow customers to customize and build earrings, bobble-head toys and other items from third-party sellers using a new personalization option on its website.

Most of the more than 200 items available on the company's new 3-D printed products store can be customized using a new feature that allows users to rotate and change the item they are viewing.

Before it is printed by one of Amazon's sellers, users can customize a product such as a bobble-head figure by changing its skin and eye color, hair style and outfit, Amazon said.

"The customization is something we're keenly interested in," said Petra Schindler-Carter, director for Amazon marketplace sales.

Amazon has expanded its marketplaces divi-

Dollar Tree to buy Family Dollar

Discount chain Dollar Tree will buy rival Family Dollar Stores for about $8.5 billion, in a surprise deal that will help it fend off increasing competition from big-box retailers such as Wal-Mart Stores.

consumers by offering more items priced at $1 or less.

The deal will give Dollar Tree more than 13,000 stores across North America, vaulting the company ahead of Dollar General Corp. to become North America's biggest discount retailer, with more than $18 billion in annual sales. REUTERS

Fist bumps relay 90 percent less germs than handshakes

Ditching handshakes in favor of more informal fist bumps could help cut down on the spread of bacteria and illnesses, according to a study released on Monday.

The study in the American Journal of Infection Control found that fist bumps, where two people briefly press the top of their fists together, transferred about 90 percent less bacteria than handshakes.

"People rarely think about the health implications of shaking hands," Dave Whitworth, a biologist at Aberystwyth University in the United Kingdom who co-authored the study, said in a statement. REUTERS

Funding. Compromise deal to ease veterans' medical waiting times

Leaders of the Veterans Affairs committees in Congress said on Monday they had struck a rare compromise deal on legislation that provides about $17 billion in funding to ease long waiting times for VA medical centers.

Sen. Bernie Sanders, an independent, and Rep. Jeff Miller, a Republican, said the figure marks about the halfway point between the competing proposals they announced last week.

The compromise measure aims to clear months-long waiting lists at VA hospitals and clinics across the country. The agency has been rocked by scandal over cover-ups of these waiting times, prompting the resignation of VA Secretary Eric Shinseki in late May.

The measure allows veterans forced to wait more than 30 days for a VA medical appointment, or who live more than 40

Making the stock market less scary

I've made millions of dollars trading stocks and teach my secrets to more than 5,000 students in 60-plus countries. I've found that many people are just scared of the stock market, so let me give you some direction to make the markets less frightening. Here are three tips:

Cutting losses limits your risk

The threat of large losses is the No. 1 reason people are intimidated by investing in the stock market. Take that possibility out of the equation by admitting to yourself that you could be wrong about any stock in which you invest. It's perfectly fine to be wrong about the market, but it's not OK to be wrong, do nothing about it and hope for a comeback, inevitably suffering a big loss.

I've made millions of dollars, but I also lose roughly 30 percent of the time. How am I still rich? Because I cut my losses quickly, and my larger wins greatly outnum-ber my small losses.

Be a realist

Everyone loves the talking E*Trade baby in TV commercials, and brokers make the stock market seem like a fun and safe place to grow your nest egg. They won't tell you that even in bull markets, most stocks go down, 90 to 95 percent of traders lose consistently and that 70 percent of professional money managers fail to beat the most popular market indices year in year out.

Don't trust talking babies on TV; they're luring you into a sucker's game. You should know the odds are against you, and without diligent study and proper expectations, you set yourself up for disappointment.

Keep it simple

I've found that simple rules — such as buying small companies that break out to new highs when they have great earnings or when they announce they're working with much bigger companies and betting against blatant scams that have inflated prices due to their having lured in suckers — are the most effective way to getting rich in the stock market.

There are many snake oil salesman who talk a big game but can't back up their track records. They exist just to intimidate you and make you feel like you need them and their gimmicks. Trust me, you don't.

Learn from successful traders and investors who enjoy teaching others and share tips freely on social media because we enjoy helping others succeed. No gimmicks, just full transparency: That's the future of finance.

Madonna braces for a Hard trial

Remember that pesky Hard Candy lawsuit that Madonna tried to get thrown out completely? Well, not only is it going forward, but it looks like Madge herself may be forced to testify. The whole mess boils down to Madonna's decision to start a fitness apparel and DVD line called Hard Candy, named after her 2008 album and subsequent world tour. Except there's already a beauty company called Hard Candy, and it claims Madonna's company has been infringing on its copyright. Did Madonna not know about it before? We'll see. This could get ugly.

So that was the reason Selena Gomez liked Justin Bieber all along?

Justin Bieber is apparently none too thrilled that on-again, off-again girlfriend Selena Gomez appears to be total BFFs with model Cara Delevingne, according to the Sun. "Justin has called Cara on more than one occasion, wanting to know what's going on. It's been clear that he's had a drink beforehand, too." I can understand Bieber's concern. Delevingne, you see, was most recently dating actress Michelle Rodriguez, and while the same source accusing Bieber of drunken, paranoid phone calls claims the relationship between Delevingne and Gomez is clearly platonic, Gomez did date Bieber for a long time. And anyone who's seen the website Lesbians Who Look Like Justin Bieber knows where I'm going with this.

Jay Z says Kimye is 'bad for business'

New details are leaking out as to why Jay Z and Beyonce sat out pal Kanye West's recent wedding: Apparently they were too good for it. "Beyonce wasn't going to allow [Kim Kardashian, West's new bride] to socially climb her. They are guarding like hell their status," a source tells Page Six. "Jay didn't want Kanye with [the bride]. He thinks it's bad for business. I think Jay lost a little respect for Kanye there." Advantage: Jay and Beyonce.

Back in 2012, Beyonce, Jay Z and Kanye West were inseparable.

Sandra Bullock toasted her 50th birthday this weekend with a lavish trip to Jackson Hole, Wyoming, with Chelsea Handler and a group of other female friends, according to E! News. The group was spotted hitting the Million Dollar Cowboy Bar for a quick drink, though it didn't appear to be a rager. "There were probably six to 10 women in the group. It appeared to be a ladies night," a source says. "It was pretty low-key. They all had one drink and were all dressed casually."

Ashton and Mila to marry a year from now

Fans waiting to see Ashton Kutcher and Mila Kunis walk down the aisle are going to have to sit tight for another 12 months, as the engaged expectant parents are reportedly looking at a July 2015 wedding date, according to Radar Online. "The wedding will be next July. They want to focus on their daughter first and having it next summer seems logical," a source says. "They won't have a big production, but it will be elaborate. The wedding party will consist of the cast of 'That '70s Show,' as they are all very close. They still hang out with the original cast all the time. Most likely Danny Masterson will be the best man, because him and Ashton are like brothers."

Art imitates life (almost) in David Shapiro's new novel

Almost too real. "You're Not Much Use to Anyone" explores our obsession with online popularity.

Freaking out about success you've yet to attain, asking yourself if you should go to law school and determining your self-worth by the number of page views your blog gets are likely a big part of your 20s. David Shapiro has been there, done that and wrote the semi-autobiographical book about it.

"In terms of how true the book is, it's a really blown-up, exaggerated version of myself," Shapiro says. In the book, the narrator — David S. — is an insecure post-grad who becomes Internet-famous by starting a Tumblr reviewing the reviews of an indie music website. In real life, the same thing happened to Shapiro when he started his Tumblr, Pitchfork Reviews Reviews. "I wish I didn't see the world like the narrator does, but I know that way of seeing the world will always be a part of me," he tries to explain, adding that the parts of the book that are fictional mostly relate to the friends and timeline.

When talking with Shapiro, he does seem a lot like David S. He hasn't figured out how to stop caring about his online presence ("It feels like a rat race in a way. ... I would like to get out of it."), and he doesn't exactly exude

As if the title didn't give it away — the book shares its name with a Belle and Sebastian song — music is a huge part of the book, and Belle and Sebastian in particular. Shapiro says he listened to Belle and Sebastian exclusively while writing the book and still listens to them every day on the subway. "Listening to Belle and Sebastian is like returning to the womb," he says. "There's a deep theme of feeling sorry for yourself and feeling inadequate. ... Now 25, Shapiro is no longer the lost post-grad he was in this semi-autobiographical novel. After doing what many confused graduates do (law school) he seems to have figured everything out. "Incidentally, I love law school more than anything I have ever done," he says. "I feel like, wow, I'm in the right place. I found what I'm supposed to do."

Competing your 'Face Off' on TV

Interview. David O'Connell tells us what it's like to get cast and work among the best of the best in his field.

T. MICHELLE MURPHY

"Face Off" airs tonight at 9 on Syfy. / ISABELLA VOSMIKOVA, SYFY

Last week was the premiere of Syfy's special effects makeup designer competition, "Face Off." Tonight, contestant David "Doc" O'Connell will be manning @FaceOffSyfy to live-tweet "Episode 2: American Gangster." We spoke with him about auditioning and what challenges he likes best.

What would you like to do as a dream job?

I'd love to work at one of the bigger FX shops, preferably in the mold department. Since the show I've spent a lot of time specifically working on that skill set. While challenging, I find mold making to be very rewarding. The better the molds, the better the final result.

If you could work on any film, what would it be?

Ugh, such a hard choice! ... If I had to be forced to pick just one, it would probably be John Carpenter's "The Thing" under Rob Bottin. It's one of my favorite movies, and it's chock-full of makeup effects.

Quoted

"I do believe I currently hold the record for most attempts before making it."

O'Connell, on his six auditions

What made you want to try out for "Face Off"?

When the first season of the show was casting, my boss and mentor Michael Burnett told me I should give it a shot. At the time I was still relatively new to special effects makeup, so I thought I had no chance. I went anyway and managed to get a call back. I watched the first season and felt that I would be overwhelmed if I had made it, so I didn't try for Season 2. Then I found out one of my close friends [Nick "Nix" Herrera] was cast — that's when I realized it was a realistic goal.

How many auditions did it end up taking in total?

Season 1, 3, 4, 5 and 6. I was selected in the group of Top 20 for Season 4-6 but kept falling short of making the final cut to 14. I do believe I currently hold the record for most attempts before making it.

your favorite challenge?
It would have to be the original zombie challenge from Season 1. Conor McCullogh's work was fantastic, and who wouldn't want to go in front of guest judge Greg Nicotero, makeup supervisor and producer of "The Walking Dead"?

If you created a challenge, what would it be?

It would probably be to put a makeup onscreen. Besides the final challenges, most makeups are only judged at the reveal stage. I think it'd be pretty cool to design, create and shoot a makeup in three days. I don't think there's a better way to grasp a makeup than seeing it onscreen.

Do you have any pet projects at the moment?
I've got a few latex Halloween masks that will be for sale soon, and my side business is Chop Shop, where I've teamed up with designer Adam Milicevic. We produce masks and props for haunts and films.

What comes next for you?
Currently I'm a lead prosthetic makeup artist for Universal Orlando's Halloween Horror Nights 24, which will feature makeups from previous seasons of "Face Off." Then the sky is the limit!

'The rockabilly scene is growing around the world'

Billies not only love the music; they love the culture and 1950s style as well: "I love the excitement and the clothes," says May. "I love the statement. If you listen to Johnny Burnette and Wanda Jackson, they broke all the rules. The rockabilly scene is growing around the world. I've never met a rockabilly fan who wasn't totally passionate about the lifestyle, too."

follow with more in the fall. We caught up with May during the European jaunt as the band's tour bus wound its way through the Pyrenees.

"We're about four hours' driving from Barcelona and just about at the border of France," May says after glancing out the bus window. "There's snow on the mountains, and it's so beautiful."

Call it a perk of the rock 'n' roll lifestyle, which May says is all she's ever known: "I started in pubs and clubs when I was 16, and I turned 40 [July 10]," she says. "So, I've been gigging for 24 years nonstop. It's fun; I don't know what else I'd do."

Another perk is meeting musical heroes: Imelda May has shared stages with Chuck Berry, Pink Floyd's David Gilmour, Van Morrison, Jeff Beck, Jamie Cullum and one extra-special star, Wanda Jackson, the original rockabilly queen.

"I get to meet great people and create great stories along the way. I'm a big believer in working hard, manners, talent and a little bit of luck," May says. "I'm very lucky in [terms of] the people I work with and the people I get to meet."

Imelda May is one of the biggest stars in Ireland right now, and it's thanks to original American rockabilly rebels such as Johnny Burnette and Wanda Jackson who inspired the Dubliner's career. However, as the singer's upcoming fall release "Tribal" proves, her musical wanderlust includes more than rockabilly; it encompasses blues and jazz, too.

"I love the rockabilly world. It's the original punk rock," May says. "But it's not natural for me to put myself in one area. There's loads of other music I don't want to ignore."

"Tribal" debuted at No. 1 in Ireland and No. 3 in the U.K., but the record won't be released in the States until September. May and her band, which includes her guitarist husband, Darrel Higham, added American dates to their summer touring agenda and will

Another generalization about Scotland that we found to be true: It can be a bit rainy and dreary. But as you'll likely hear locals say, "The bars are dry."

Glasgow, Scotland: Hey, hey, the gangs aren't here

UK. This European city has eradicated its more violent residents and is reaching out to artists to revitalize.

Throughout much of Europe, Glasgow generally has been known for gang-related activity. But for every gang member this Scottish city pushes out, it attempts to replace he or she with a young artist.

Six years ago, the city started the Glasgow International art festival, which has been a big contributor to the city's revitalization.

Sarah McCrory, director of Glasgow International, which showcases local and international contemporary art, says the city is giving young people resources to learn here and then stay here, such as giving the students empty, post-industrial buildings "for use and [to] make over."

The Glasgow International festival is held every other year: The next one will be in April 2016, so plan ahead. The festival is spread out in venues across the city, hosting discussions, performances and exhibitions.

The city's artistic engine is the Glasgow School of Art, where students surround themselves with classic and contemporary works as they learn within the school's iconic building designed by the city's most famous artist, Charles Rennie Mackintosh.

The city's architecture may be its most impressive draw, however. Along the "Style Mile," the twisting, stone-lined road lined with stores, the number of stores isn't as impressive as the buildings they occupy: The stone-castlelike structures stretch into the sky. It can be unsettling to see a TGI Friday's storefront in an elegant stone building, but there weren't many vacant properties along the mile either, which means Glasgow seems to be succeeding in its mission to bring people in.

Genius summer parenting hacks

During the summer, it seems harder than usual to keep the apartment clean and the kids entertained at the same time. Shortcuts that make those tasks easier can be life-changing. So we talked to mom and self-described clean freak Debra Johnson, an expert for the cleaning service Merry Maids, for tips on being the best parent ever without living in squalor. EMILY LAURENCE

Cleaning up sand

Beach days with the kids are the best, but it also means you'll be finding sand everywhere for weeks afterward. "Have kids do a little dance on the door mat with bare feet before coming inside," Johnson recommends. "Four or five steps on the mat will transfer the sandy soil from their feet onto the mat instead of from their feet onto your floor."

Let them roll around in the sand; we found a way to keep it out of the house. / ALL PHOTOS COLOURBOX

Getting out ice-pop stains

Ice pops are the essential summer snack, but it's virtually impossible for a kid to eat one without it getting all over his or her face and dripping everywhere. "The best remedy for removing an ice-pop stain from upholstery or carpeting is to dampen the stained area with [a] dish-washing liquid solution," Johnson says. "Then, place a white terry-cloth towel over the solution and run over the towel with a hot iron. This will help transfer much of the stain to the towel."

Cleaning up glitter without getting it all over yourself

The glitter aftermath of a rainy day craft cleanup can be a nightmare. "Make DIY lint rollers with the kids so they can own the cleanup responsibility," she advises. "Help them create a loop of tape that fits loosely around their fingers or hands so they can tap the sparkly surfaces and capture any glitter that got left behind."

Winning the sticky battle

Between juice boxes, melting sugary snacks and who knows what else, summer is a sticky mess. To keep your counters clean, Johnson says to make it a team effort with your kids. "Teach them to wipe up spills as soon as they happen. Work together by having one person rub the juice stain with an ice cube while the other pats the area dry," she says.

Preventing slips and falls

After a day at the pool, kids are bound to get their little wet footprints all over the floor and leave soggy towels and toys wherever they feel like it. To prevent slippery falls, Johnson recommends setting up a towel tree in the bathroom where kids can hang swimsuits and towels to dry completely. Not only does it keep everyone safe, it keeps the apartment clean, too.

Discovering the city's best family activities

There are so many fun and #FabUlyss ways to see NYC as a family. Here are my picks for the best spots where your kids can take in the city's rich culture.

Sailing away

Have you heard about Manhattan By Sail? You can experience sailing at sunset and seeing NYC's skyline with the family. You will love seeing Ellis Island, the Freedom Tower, Statue of Liberty and much more while sailing around Manhattan.

Park and ride

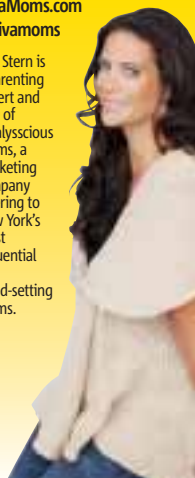

My boys love visiting Victorian Gardens at Wollman Rink. They cannot get enough of the rides and games. Conveniently located in Central Park, this is one stop that you will want to take your kids to before the summer is over.

Beach day

If you're in Coney Island, don't forget to check out Luna Park — there are lots of fun rides for all ages. You can explore the boardwalk before or after, and of course stop by Nathan's for a famous hot dog.

Art for everyone

The "Jeff Koons: A Retrospective" show at the Whitney is a must. This family-friendly exhibition features a giant sculpture of a balloon dog, a larger-than-life sculpture of Play-Doh and much more.

Cool off

Did you know "gelato" is the Italian word for ice cream? One of my favorite gelato stores is Grom. We love a Delyssious treat on these hot summer days.

Past laws never kind to immigrants

Re: 'Immigrate as in times past' (Metro, July 28) I beg to differ with the writer of the letter to the editor on the issue of immigration, as if it began during the time of Ellis Island. The first law dealing with immigration was the Alien Naturalization Act of 1790, which states, "Any nonindented white person can become a citizen if they stayed in this country for a year." After the Civil War and the building of the transcontinental railroad, there was an influx of Asians, especially Chinese, who were brought over to work on the railroad. There were the Chinese Exclusion Acts of the 1880s, which meant to stop all immigration of Asians and the Chinese into the U.S. This act was repealed by the Magnuson Act of 1943. Then there was the Immigration Restriction Act of 1921 and the Emergency Quota Act of 1924, which sought to reduce present immigrant communities first to 3 percent of the existing population and then to 2 percent of the existing population.

These laws were to restrict the immigration of Southern and Eastern Europeans and Jews while prohibiting immigration of Arabs, Eastern Asians and Indians.

Giants with 'tight' battle for end spot

NFL. Sunday's Hall of Fame game will help shake out a competition at tight end with no clear favorite.

While head coach Tom Coughlin wants his team to think every starting position is up for grabs, the reality is most are already etched in stone. One group still very much a mystery, however, is the tight end position.

Little-known Larry Donnell of Grambling State currently has the inside track, as the second-year player has received the bulk of the first-team reps. Right behind him on the depth chart is the well-traveled Daniel Fells, a first-year Giant who has been getting the majority of goal-line looks along with fellow nomad Kellen Davis whenever the Giants run their "heavy" offensive sets.

Adrien Robinson, the man general manager Jerry Reese dubbed "the [Jason Pierre-Paul] of tight ends" following the 2012 draft due to his freakish athleticism, has been in tight end purgatory.

"I think, right now,

Shooting 70

QB coach Danny Langsdorf raised eyebrows Monday when he said he'd like to see Eli Manning complete 70 percent of passes. His career high is 62.9 percent.

- "We want to raise his completion percentage for sure," he said. "I don't know about the history, maybe because they took more shots downfield, but we'd love to shoot for 70."

they've all got a shot," said tight ends coach Kevin Gilbride. "They're all very good in certain areas and maybe not as efficient or as good in other areas. In order to become that all-around tight end — and start — they need to continue to develop."

Robinson doesn't lack confidence, despite sitting fifth on the depth chart.

"Time will tell, but there's a reason I'm still around," said Robinson. "People always wonder why I've stayed around [and] the reason is they want to keep me around."

Computer to Jets: Start Vick over Smith

Jets general manager John Idzik says who starts at quarterback between Geno Smith and Michael Vick will be a "Jets decision" that will include the coaches and management.

Metro posed a different solution: Let a computer do it.

According to PredictionMachine.com, the decision between Smith and Vick is a no-brainer. Through 50,000 simulations of the Jets' season for each quarterback, the website saw a clear trend: Start Vick.

With Smith as the starter, Prediction Machine has the Jets going 6-10 with a 10 percent chance at the playoffs. Vick gives the Jets a 7-9 record and a 20 percent chance at the playoffs.

"The fact that the Jets would be favored in only two games with Geno Smith as the QB and five games with Michael Vick starting is a significant difference," Prediction Machine's Paul Bessire said. KRISTIAN DYER

NFL defends Rice ban

The NFL defended the much-maligned two-game suspension of Ravens running back Ray Rice on Monday. NFL Senior Vice President of Labor Policy Adolpho Birch told ESPN "in terms of sending a message about what the league stands for, we've done that." The lenient ban for the former Rutgers star knocking his fiancée unconscious has received widespread criticism.
